13. ABSTRACT (Maximum 200 words)

The five previous Navy-wide Personnel Survey (NPS) questionnaires were screened for questions that appeared on two or more of the surveys. The data for those questions were retrieved from the corresponding data bases and depicted on graphs. The sampling represented 4-5% of the eligible enlisted and 11-13% of the eligible officer populations throughout the years. The overall return rates were between 44% and 47% of the entire sample, varying by paygrade. Positive and negative trends were obtained, while in some cases results remained the same from year to year. Although most of the trends in this report are statistically significant, the practical significance of those trends needs to be determined by program managers. Generally, officers hold more positive views than enlisted. The upward trends generally relate to the service member and family services area in which both officers and enlisted personnel showed improved satisfaction. The negative trends in the perception of naval personnel are in the areas of equal opportunities and sexual harassment.

Foreword

Administered annually since 1990, the Navy-wide Personnel Survey (NPS) is a major product of the Navy Survey Resource Center (NSRC) at the Navy Personnel Research and Development Center. The NPS examines the perceptions of personnel in a variety of areas including detailing and the assignment process, quality of life programs, organizational climate, and health issues. This information is valuable to managers and policy makers in program formulation and evaluation.

NPS 1994 was conducted under the sponsorship of the Chief of Naval Personnel (PERS-00) within reimbursable Work Unit 95WRPS500. Data collection concluded in mid-January 1995, and the results of the survey were briefed to the Chief of Naval Personnel, his staff, and sponsors in April 1995.

This technical note presents trends of core items represented in several of the previous NPSs. Any questions regarding this report should be directed to Dr. John Kantor, (619) 553-7651 or DSN 553-7651.

Executive Summary

The graphs in this report are based on five previous sets of NPS results. Items with consistent wording were analyzed, and the results are depicted in graphs. Not all items appeared in all surveys. When interpreting graphs, only items that show two consecutive downturns or upturns should be considered trends. In addition, the listing of the statistical significance of each directional shift on the graph is purposefully omitted in favor of letting the reader decide on the practical significance of each trend. The reason for this decision is that the large number of cases in the surveys causes even small differences in trends to be statistically significant, although many of those differences may not be practically meaningful. The results of the trend analysis are depicted in the graphs starting on page three.

Introduction

Problem

The morale and job performance of Navy personnel take on added importance in an era of downsizing, where each individual must contribute to the increased efficiency required of a reduced force in a still-hostile world. Navy personnel attitudes and opinions represent input vital to the development and continuous improvement of Navy policies and programs. Therefore, such opinions must be measured in a systematic and timely fashion, to furnish an accurate reflection of the views of the Navy's diverse and widespread membership.

Purpose

The Navy-wide Personnel Survey (NPS), administered annually since 1990, was designed to collect opinion data on a systematic basis and to provide timely information on issues of importance to policy makers. The annual sampling, representative of the entire Navy population, allows the identification and analysis of trends in opinions and attitudes toward plans, programs, and policies that materially affect the performance and morale of Navy personnel. The survey was also designed to accommodate the study of topics of compelling interest on a one-time basis. This technical note provides graphs of results obtained from the last five administrations of NPS.

Approach

The five previous NPS questionnaires were screened for questions that appeared on two or more of the surveys. The data for those questions were retrieved from the corresponding data bases and depicted on graphs. Questions that were reworded were not included in the analyses, because the meaning of the questions may have been changed with the change in the wording. The sampling represented 4-5% of the eligible enlisted and 11-13% of the eligible officer populations throughout the years. The overall return rates were between 44% and 47% for the entire sample, varying by paygrade. Return rate is consistently lower for the enlisted population. It increases by paygrade for both officer and enlisted populations.

Results

Positive and negative trends were obtained, while in some cases results remained the same from year to year. Generally, officers hold more positive views than enlisted. The upward trends generally relate to the service member and family services area in which both officers and enlisted personnel showed improved satisfaction during the past few years. The negative trends in the perception of naval personnel are in the areas of equal opportunities and sexual harassment. The following section depicts the graphs and tables of the trends.

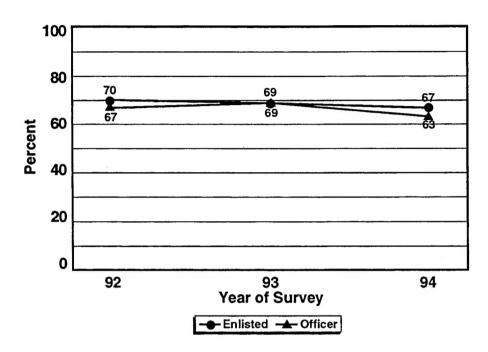

Most of the trends depicted in the chart are statistically significant. However, it is left to the reader to determine the practical significance of a trend. In cases where the sample size is large, such as the NPS, even the smallest change may be statistically significant. However, those differences may not have any practical importance. Therefore, caution should be exercised in the interpretation of trends.

Another issue in interpreting trends is that the reader may interpret a change in direction as a trend, even if it represents only a single occurrence. Only two consecutive declines or increases should be interpreted as a trend -- a change for any given year may only be a random occurrence.

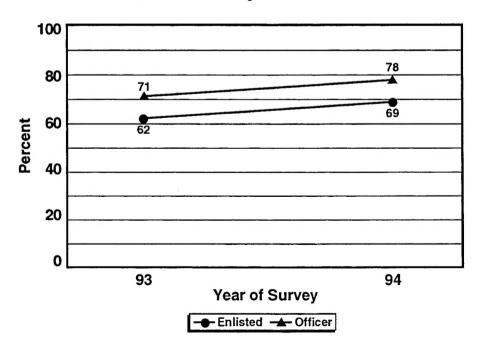

The sequence of graphs in this report corresponds to the sequence of questions in the NPS 1994. A copy of the 1994 NPS appears in the appendix.
